The National Association of County Agricultural Agents announced in November that the news column "South 40", that appears weekly in the TIMES-VIRGINIAN, written by James A. Smith, 22-year Extension veteran, placed second in the Nation, placed first in Virginia and first in the Southern Region which included 13 states from Virginia to Texas.

On Tuesday, November 7th, Jim Smith was elected Secretary-Treasurer of the National Association of County Agricultural Agents. This was the first time a Virginian had been elected to National office.

The Falling River County Club Member-Guest Tourney winners in flights were John Paul Rothgeb and guest Eddie Rothgeb.

H. H. Dotson, of Rustburg, won the "Club Championship" trophy at FRCC's annual Labor Day Tournament.

The Appomattox Post Office became a part of area mail processing, one of the newest innovations of the U. S. Postal Service, effective September 30th. Mail is now postmarked with a local postmark ONLY if it remains in Appomattox or if the sender requests it on selected pieces of mail, otherwise it is sent to Lynchburg and is postmarked there reading "U. S. Postal Service".

The first Annual Christmas parade, sponsored by the Appomattox County Chamber of Commerce, was held on Friday, December 1st. It was very successful with a large turnout for the parade. The Chamber of Commerce plans for this to be an annual event with more floats and entries each year entering the parade.

All considered, 1972 must be marked up as a good year for Appomattox County and now we look forward to 1973 with hope for an even better year ahead for everyone.

The Paster Speaks

"Fear Not"

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear but of power and of love and of a sound mind." II Tim. 1:7

When a person commits his life to the Lord Jesus Christ, God undertakes a special protection of that man. Until his work here is done he lives a charmed existence of absolute security! The believer therefore should not fear any evil provided he has done his best to avoid self-made trouble. If after taking reasonable precautions, circumstances still arise that perplex, he may be sure that God will certainly make a way of escape at the proper moment or give grace to endure the difficulty. Only as we live a life of perfect trust can we experience God's strengthening power and love and keep our mental balance amid the problems that naturally plague us on this sinful earth. Assured of our Saviour's love, care and guidance we should go bravely forward, confident of the fact that true faith will help us to "stand" those things that we cannot "understand".

Several years ago some needy settlers in British Columbia began stripping an abandoned Fort of its lumber, but apparently they found mighty locks attached to heavy doors and two-inch steel bars covering all the windows, upon closer examination, however, they were amazed to discover that the walls of the prison were only made of all board and paper, cleverly painted to resemble iron. The prisoners had been completely fooled by the roofs and never sought to escape. yet a good football tackle could have easily thrown himself against the frail petition and burst them asunder. Often times we too, seem to be hemmed in by circumstances and difficulties that threaten to hold us Prisoner. how easy it is to sit back and pout with fear and

Ezekiel Among the Exiles

Scripture: Ezekiel 1:1-3; 2-4; 33:1-9

"Son of man, I have made you a watchman for the house of Israel; whenever you hear a word from my mouth, you shall give them warning from me." Ezekiel 3:17

Another of the prophets of judgment and hope, in the terrible era of Judah's fall and captivity, was Ezekiel. Like Jeremiah, this younger contemporary was also of a priestly family. Ezekiel's prophetic ministry began about 593 B.C., a generation after Jeremiah's had begun in the brighter, more hopeful days of King Josiah. Similar in many features of their preaching and teaching, Jeremiah and Ezekiel prophesied in different settings, the former in the embattled homeland, the latter among exiles from Judah in Babylonia.

Ezekiel was among those taken captive to Babylonia with King Jehoiachin (son of Jehoiakim) after a three-month reign, the queen mother, princes, "the mighty men of valor," the craftsmen and smiths, in 598 B. C. His call came in the fifth year of Jehoiachin's exile, some six years before Jerusalem was to be captured and destroyed. Before he was taken to Babylon, Ezekiel had probably known, or at least had heard, Jeremiah in Jerusalem.

As Jeremiah, Ezekiel perceived that Jerusalem and Judah must experience destruction and the people captivity as the penalty for forsaking God. There was no escape from the severe tribulation through which they must pass before there would be hope of redemption and recovery. Ezekiel saw this hope to lie with the exiles, and his prophetic ministry among them had as one major objective calling them again to their role as the people of God and challenging them to measure up to the responsibility implicit in it.

Those who study this International Sunday School lesson must ask themselves, what is the significance of an ancient prophet, preaching to exiles from Judah in the Mesopotamian valley two and a half millinia ago, for our day? What can a message to a displaced and transplanted people mean to a settled and an affluent society?

One has only to read the Scriptural background for the lesson to find it pregnant with significance for 1973. The responsibility for being "a watchman for the house of Israel," with which God charged Ezekiel, is a responsibility each believer today has for the world in which he lives. God still commits His work in the world to human responsibility, and He still calls people to do it. The nature of the responsibility of being watchman for ancient Israel in exile is still the nature of the responsibility of the watchman-believer: he is to communicate God's warning to both the wicked and the righteous, to the end that if they heed God's warning they shall live. Significantly, if the watchman fails to give God's warning, the blood of those who die in their iniquity, God will require of those called to be watchmen who fail in their obligation.

There has never been a time when conditions were such that it was not necessary to have watchmen to [illegible] God's warning, and today is no exception. God's description of the people of Judah to Ezekiel - "a nation of rebels, who rebelled - . . (and) transgressed against me . . . impudent and stubborn" - is pertinent for our time. People today [illegible] God, some confident of their own self-sufficiency, seek to find the key to life in their achievements and others in some giving the priority to false gods, the modern idols of materialism and pleasure, power and selfishness.

As there came to the watchman Ezekiel, there come to [illegible] today's watchmen-believers both challenge and warning. Are we to be afraid or intimidated by those who rebel against God? Rather God's message is to be proclaimed fearlessly, without regard to whether it is heeded or not. It is the watchman's responsibility to give the warning when he sees danger coming; those who heed will save themselves, those who do not will be destroyed. In the case of the watchman warns, he discharges his obligation and saves himself from responsibility for the destruction of those who refuse to heed the warning.

TIPS ON QUITTING CIGARETTES

1. Pick a Q (Quit) Day.
2. Switch to a low tar-nicotine brand, and begin to cut down BEFORE Q Day.
3. Keep a supply of substitutes handy: mints, gum, celery, carrot sticks.
4. Quit on Q Day; use substitutes when the urge to smoke is strong; keep busy; pamper yourself with special meals; drink plenty of water; exercise.
5. Renew your resolve daily. Think over the health hazards of cigarettes.
6. Plan a treat for yourself with the money you used to spend on cigarettes.

14 Point Buck Killed Wednesday

Shown in the picture above is a 14 point buck killed on Wednesday, January 3, 1973, by Sonny O'Brien.

This handsome buck had a 21 inch spread, and O'Brien had good reason to be proud of his kill.

Good Way To End Deer Season

John Browder and Claude Kelso of Appomattox ended the deer season with a "bang" by getting the two-point buck shown above. They were quite proud of their kill for the last day of deer season.

omemaker Hints

By Rebecca M. Johnson, Extension Agent

As most of you know, shopping is a real challenge. It's difficult to choose which products will give you the most for your money. Good nutrition is important but it's also important for your family to enjoy your food. Uneaten meals won't supply any nutrients. So how can you get the most nutrition for your good dollar?

Before you shop, sit down and make a plan. Make up your menus for a week, and from this make a list of the kinds and amounts of foods that you need for the week. While you're planning, refer to grocery store specials in the newspaper. Planning some of your meals around the specials offered on meats will save money. If your family particularly likes an item that's on special and you have adequate storage space, buy it in larger quantities.

When you get into the store stick to your list, but be flexible enough to make substitutions if you find an exceptionally good buy. The substituted food should have the same food value as the food you had intended to buy. Sticking to your list or making wise substitutions is important, because impulse buying makes the food bill go up!

Read labels, for they tell you the exact ingredients. Remember - the item listed first is present in the largest amount, and the rest are in descending order of amount. Choose a quality which is suitable for the intended use. Some canned fruits and vegetables are graded, with grade A being more expensive than grade B or C. These lower grades are good for soups and casseroles, while the higher grades may be better for salads and garnishes. Chunk, grated, or flaked tuna or salmon are cheaper than solid pack and are suitable for many uses.

Always compare costs. Use unit pricing if your store has this service, or figure it up yourself. When comparing various cuts of meat, consider the amount of bone and fat you'll be getting. Count on getting about four servings per pound for boneless cuts; two servings from bone-in cuts; and one from bony cuts such as spare ribs. Learning to recognize a package that contains enough of a particular cut to serve your family will help you to compare costs.

Be willing to try different things. If you see a less expensive brand, try to see if it is acceptable.

Don't serve the same things all the time. While beef is perhaps the most popular meat, don't forget veal, lamb, poultry, and pork for good buys as well as interesting and nutritious meals.

Know what you're paying for. Many products today are convenience foods. You are probably paying for the built-in maid service that you get with these foods. The service may range from very little, such as measuring the ingredients in hot roll mixes, to almost complete preparation of the products. Brown and serve rolls are an example of this. It's up to you to evaluate the cost, quality, and the time that these products may save you in relation to your wants and needs, and those of your family.

Why Compensator® is best for upgrading performance of dairy cows.

Compensator liquid feed is made to give both your cows and your wallet a better break.

It supplies the extra protein, phosphorus, vitamins, minerals, sulfur and energy needed to hike production, in a way that lowers your feeding costs.

For example, after switching from soybean meal to Compensator, a Virginia farmer increased his DHIA average more than 1500 pounds for 200 cows, and cut $4000 off his feed costs in one year.

And a Maine dairy farmer found his herd conception rate was 20% higher since feeding Compensator.

It's no accident Compensator works so well. Allied Chemical designed it to outperform all other supplements—liquid or dry. Nutrients are released slowly for maximum utilization. Vitamins remain stable. Minerals are more available. Nitrogen is balanced with sulfur. And Compensator's neutral pH matches rumen pH.

The way Compensator upgrades performance of dairy cows, proves all supplements aren't created equal. Compensator is made to be the best.

Allied Chemical — COMPENSATOR LIQUID FEED

Due to the fast rising cost of dry supplement, such as soybean and peanut meal, we believe we can save dairy men a substantial amount on their feed costs. There are many ways of handling liquid protein. Call us today. - We may have an idea you had not thought of.
